The ultimate list of Resume Blunders

- Typos and grammatical errors
- Inconsistency in formatting
- Writing in ALL CAPS or all bold
- Not listing most recent employment first
- Inappropriate email address
- Format too difficult to send or view on every device
- · Too wordy or too brief
- Hyper-modesty
- Not quantifying specific accomplishments
- Dates and content not consistent with another social media posting
- · Listing job or education that cannot be verified

Critical Mistakes Explained

Objective or summary concerns

Objective or summary statements are not necessary. Often, this declaration of competency is written in a manner that is misleading, ambiguous, overly specific, too wordy or simply ineffective. There is no need to include.

Blatant errors

According to CareerBuilder, 58% of resumes have typos. There may be hundreds (or even thousands!) of responses to a single job posting. One of the easiest ways to quickly sort through resumes is to immediately throw out any containing errors.

Bad formatting

If your resume is hard to read or takes too long to open because of its file format, it will also be eliminated promptly. There is just too much competition for each posting.

Hyper-modesty

Don't sell yourself short! This is your one chance to share your accomplishments.

What Makes a Good Resume?

Formatted correctly

- · Use a template with columns and bullet points
- Incorporate both italics and bold fonts
- · Maintain consistency with punctuation, font, tabs and verb tense
- Choose a professional font in 11 pt or larger

Concise and measurable job experience

- List in reverse chronological order
- · Highlight accomplishments and unique achievements
- Quantify with numeric values when possible
- Start every bullet point with a verb (in correct tense)

Visually appealing

- Include appropriately sized margins
- Critical information is easy to access quickly
- Use bullet points rather than paragraphs

Customized for effectiveness

- Wording, format, highlighted accomplishments and achievements reflect professional focus
- Define your accomplishments with specific examples rather than using common "buzzwords"
